

Crunch Time!

As of this week, we have been working on our digital portfolios, original works, and we will also soon start reaching out to professionals in our field of study in order to interview them and find a potential mentor that can help us throughout this program and on our final product. All of the research that we have been doing throughout the first quarter finally seems to be piercing together and I can now see where I am headed with my research in ISM and how I will apply it in order to come up with my original work soon. As everything seems to be overlapping with each other in the limited time we have in this class, I am beginning to see how everything I have been doing in this class is working towards something bigger, such as finding a mentor and coming up with an original work. In this time, I have decided that I would like to make a slight change to my topic focus from “neurosurgery” to neurological disorders and treatments as a lot of the research I have done in the field of neurology has led me to become extremely interested in neurological disorders and forms of treatment for these disorders. I think that this will give me more freedom of creativity with what I can create for my original work and final product and be more satisfied with what I took out of this program. Overall, as my journey in this class is beginning to become more clear and I now understand where I am headed with my research, I am ready to come up with a commendable original work.
